

Utopia'

In my view, there are several fundamentals for an ideal society. Utilizing technology to its full potential plays an important role in this view.

There is no hierarchy in my utopia, all people are equal to each other. No one has more privileges than others.

Good health should be accessible for everyone. By technological advances diseases and death should no longer be necessary.

A traditional government has become absolute, because there are no world problems to solve. Societal decisions are made in a truly democratic way, every person can have an influence in the decision making process. The decision making process is also totally transparent.

Durable resources (energy and food) should be available for the whole planet. There is no need for a war for resources, because they are freely accessible for everyone. The harvesting of energy and food is done automatically by using autonomous systems.

Money does not exist. All the luxury goods are freely available to everyone.

All the world's combined knowledge is accessible for everyone, to use to his or her own liking.

Nobody needs to do work that he or she does not enjoy most of the time. All the necessary 'low-skilled' jobs (cleaning, garbage disposal) are replaced by technological solutions, except if people enjoy this kind of job. People are encouraged to pursue jobs or tasks that they enjoy and are let free to do so.

The highest goal of this society is to pursue creative and technological advancements, which either give people an emotional experience or an improvement of their quality of life.
